GOULD 10--SOUTH PARIS 6

Gould Academy had little trouble Wednesday defeating South Paris by a score of 10 to 6. Tucker and Wentzel with three hits each led a 13 hit barrage on Briggs, losing pitcher. Eddy and O'Neill Robertson also connected for two nice singles each. One of Eddy's singles got through an outfielder's legs and rolled over the bank, enabling him to clear the bases.

Keniston was in trouble a good part of the time, but in all but the third and fifth innings some fine fielding pulled him out of the hole. Stearns was the big gun in the Paris attack with a home run and three singles. Lahti also hit for the circuit.

MISS ANNIE HAMLIN

Miss Annie Hamlin died at her home here Friday. Her health had been failing for some time.

Miss Hamlin was born in Milan, N. H., Jan. 22, 1870. She was the daughter of Dexter and Celestine Cross Hamlin. She was a graduate of Gould Academy, and taught school in Brewer, Maine, and Berlin, N. H. For the past few years she has served as librarian in the Bethel Library.

She was very active in lodge and club work, having served as Worthy Matron of Starr King Chapter, O. E. S., of Berlin. She was also Past Worthy Grand Matron of the Grand Chapter, O. E. S., of New Hampshire. She was past president of the Berlin Woman's Club, and a trustee of Gould Academy.

She is survived by two brothers, Fred of Bethel and Frank of Berlin, N. H.; three nephews, Will and Charles Phillips of Brewer and Moses Phillips of Bangor; and several cousins.

Miss Hamlin's funeral was held from her home on Church Street Monday at 2 p. m. Rev. Israel Jordan officiated, assisted by Rev. Herbert T. Wallace.

WINFIELD SCOTT WIGHT

Winfield Scott Wight died at the State Odd Fellows' Home in Auburn Thursday morning, May 6, after a short illness.

He was born at Gilead, April 9, 1848, the son of Gardner and Rachel (Stiles) Wight. There he lived for 22 years, then moved to North-west Bethel, on the Newell farm, and continued farming for 10 years.

After his parents passed away Mr. Wight traveled with the Harrington Concert Company, giving concerts and teaching music, covering all the six Eastern States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the Canadian provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Later he carried on the same work for himself, holding musical conventions and institutes of various kinds.

He was graduated from Hollis Normal Institute of Music at Boston, August, 1894.

Prof. Wight was interested in William Rogers Chapman's Maine Festivals and worked diligently for the interest of that association, singing in the chorus for 28 years at Portland, and several years at Bangor.

In 1887 he married Flora Bartlett of East Bethel. They had one daughter, Marie, born in 1898. She passed away in 1928.

Well known in musical circles, Wight gave freely of his time and assisted in leading the music at several Methodist camp meetings, and church services in this State. It was always an inspiration to one to see him direct a chorus in gospel songs.

He was an attendant of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bethel and aided in the choir whenever he was able to be there.

Always an ardent lover of good music, he enjoyed the best, and he able to sing up until a month before his death. His voice retained its rich depth of tone and clearness in spite of his 89 years.

Surviving are one grandniece, Mrs. Hazel Arno Johnson of Gardiner, and one grandnephew, Ivan W. Arno of Errol, N. H.

The funeral services were held at the Memorial Chapel of Dillingham & Son, Auburn, on Saturday at 10:30 a. m. Interment at Riverside Cemetery, Bethel.

"The Choir Invisible" by George Eliot was read by Rev. Mr. Cate at the funeral service.

"Mellotte" by David Stevens is a story about the surprising adventures of a little girl who offers to spend her hard earned savings of 100 pennies for food and clothing for the Turtle Woman who turns out to be a fairy in disguise.

Her further experiences are much like those in real life; and through wise investments of her "Small Change" her "Silver Dollar" comes back to her intact. Following is the cast of characters: Mellotte, Pearl Daye; Turtle Woman, Priscilla Carver; Silver Dollar (an Honest Coin), Eugene Van.

Three Silver Quarters, Donald Brooks, Frank Hunt Jr., Richard Hutchinson; Silver Dime (Small Change), Roger Pratt.

The home team dropped its opening game 7-6 in 13 innings to Mexico but have been coming along fast of late, having turned in three straight wins. The outfield is looking exceptionally good with Sim Keddy in centerfield while O. Robertson at third has added batting power to the club. In left field and right field both MacFarland and Wentzel are showing considerable improvement in their play. Wentzel is now hitting at a .353 clip. Tucker batting .571, O. Robertson .500 and Capt. Eddy Robertson .388 are the other three men batting away over .300 to date.

The game Saturday should be a real battle and a good crowd is anticipated. Lurvey and Gill will again officiate.

Your electric range cooks in your absence

What modern woman wants to slave away her life in the kitchen? And it's no longer necessary—with a modern electric range. The meals fairly cook themselves, because the cooking is automatic. You put a meal into the oven, and when it is completely cooked, the heat shuts itself off—whether you are elsewhere in the house, or at a movie or the club. No wonder up-and-coming women, the country over, are going "electric."

And you're proud to own so handsome a range, with its gleaming tabletop and fast-cooking plates, the large-family size oven with full automatic temperature control, the non-smoking broiler pan, and convenient storage drawer. Have you seen the new models in our show-room?

HOW

TRAPPERS CAN TAN ANIMAL HIDES, TOLD BY COLLEGE. — Each trapping season many readers ask for a simple and easy home method of tanning hides. This process is never simple or easy but requires patience and care. North Carolina State college recommends the following method:

Thoroughly flesh the hide; that is, carefully scrape away all particles of meat. Wash the hair side carefully, using washing powder and warm water. Trim off all ragged edges. Sprinkle salt on a clean floor, spread the hide on it, hakeside down, and cover the flesh side thickly with salt. In about two weeks the hide will be completely cured and ready for tanning.

Make a tanning solution in proportions of three ounces of commercial sulphuric acid to two pounds of common salt and a gallon of water—there must be enough solution to cover the hide. Soak it first in clear water until soft and pliable and drop it in the solution held in a wooden container. Small hides may be removed after 12 to 24 hours but heavier hides must remain in the solution from two to three days and must be stirred at intervals to assure even and uniform tanning. Remove hide, wash well and work it over until soft and pliable.

1939 World's Fair Has New Ideas About Amusement Features

NEW YORK, (Special). — "Only seeing will be believing," says President Grover Whalen of the New York World's Fair 1939 Corporation, as he tries to envision what the Fair is planning more than two years in advance, in the way of facilities for recreation and amusement and amusement.

Every man, woman and child in the United States, he says, has an interest in the 1939 Fair and to some degree or other has a part in the building of that Fair. The exposition therefore, will surpass all previous fairs, not only in the demonstration of the wonders of the world at present-day life and in the protection of the World of Tomorrow but also in providing the utmost variety of entertainment and amusement for every man, woman and child.

The entire world will be tapped for every amusement possible. The tireless mediocrity of stunts and side shows—the stock-in-trade relics of the amusement world of yesterday will give way to a new and modern standard of excellence. The plan of the New York World's Fair has anticipated the requirements for entertainment and is making them a part of the general scheme of the Fair rather than allowing them to spring up as an appendage or an afterthought. Ever the time children will have a playground reserved exclusively for their own use.

A new method of buying amusement for tanning will be used by five Maine canneries this year. The plan is described in bulletin 225 of the Maine Extension Service, Orono, Maine. Copies are free.

ASLEEP AT THE SWITCH

The SUPREME COURT AND HOW IT WORKS

Guarding Personal Rights
By ROBERT MERRILL
THE Supreme court has protected citizens not only from unfair treatment on the part of the federal government, but also from being deprived of Constitutional rights by the governments of their own states.

An act of legislature which discriminates unfairly against a citizen violates his rights under the Constitution. The government must not only treat him fairly, but must treat him in the same manner in which it treats other persons under similar conditions.

On frequent occasions citizens have appealed to the court and asked: "Why should the law of my state impose hardships upon me which it does not impose upon other people? Isn't this a discrimination against me, and a violation of my right to the due process of law guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States?"

Matrimonial Rights.
When such a question is brought before it, the court studies the case and, if it decides the petitioner is right, assures the protection sought.

For example:
At one time, in the eyes of the law, husband and wife were regarded as one person—the husband. Today, however, a married woman may enter into contracts, and may own and enjoy her own property.

Some years ago a state attempted to impose on one of its citizens an income tax which was calculated upon the combined incomes of the citizen and his wife. Because of the graduated scale of taxation, the amount of tax claimed was greater than it would have been had the individual incomes of husband and wife been separately taxed.

The husband believed this unfair, and appealed to the Supreme court of the United States. He pointed out that under the laws of the state he had no control over his wife's property or income, and held that, therefore, it was unjust for the state to impose taxes for them upon him. The court heard his case, agreed with his contention, and gave the relief for which he asked, declaring the taxation arbitrary and a denial of due process.

Newspapers Unfairly Taxed.
"We have no doubt," explained the opinion, "that because of the fundamental conceptions which underlie our system, any attempt by a state to measure the tax on one person's property or income by reference to the property or income of another is contrary to due process of law as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment. That which is not in fact the taxpayer's income cannot be made such by calling it income."

In a more recent case a state law was passed imposing a tax upon the advertising income of all newspapers in the state with a circulation of over 20,000 a week. Since this affected only the larger publications, they protested that they were being treated unfairly. They held that while the state had power to impose taxes, it had no right to tax some newspapers and not others, unless there was some reasonable ground on which they could be differently classified.

The suit was carried to the Supreme court of the United States. The court heard the newspapers' appeal and decided in their favor.

The court, in its opinion, referred to an untrammeled press as "a vital source of public information." It pointed out that the case went to "the heart of the natural right of the members of an organized society, united for their common good, to impart and acquire information about their common interests."

Freedom of the Press.
"The 1st Amendment to the Federal Constitution," the opinion explained, "provides that 'Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press . . . While this provision is not a restraint upon the powers of the states, the states are precluded from abridging the freedom of speech or of the press by force of the due process clause of the 14th Amendment.'"

"A free press," it added, "stands as one of the great interpreters between the Government and the people. To allow it to be fettered is to fetter ourselves."
In this way does our national umpire insist that the rules laid down by the people in the United States Constitution be observed not only by the federal government but by all state governments as well.

Baby Kangaroo Very Small
The young of the kangaroo at birth is smaller in proportion to the size of the parents than the young of any other animal. Some of the larger species of kangaroo stand about eight feet in height and have a head as large as that of a sheep. The young at birth are about an inch in length and weigh only about twenty grains, which is 1-250th of a pound. By means of their perfectly formed front legs the young propel themselves to the pouch on the mother's abdomen where they are nourished and sheltered for several months.

Most Valuable Poem
Philippe Desportes died at sixty-one, having achieved immortal reputation as the highest paid poet in history. Desportes, an ecclesiastic and a diplomat apparently well deserving of the title of diplomat, was asked by King Henry III of France to write a verse with which the royal lover could pay tribute to his sweetheart. Desportes' poem had only three lines, but Henry III was so pleased he rewarded him with the title of four abbays which brought in Desportes a total revenue of $3,300,000. In those days the abbays derived a share of the income of every person in the district.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual National and International Problem Inseparable from Local Welfare

It has been generally quiet on the business front lately, with the indicators tending slightly downward. Activity in the stock market has been sporadic, with occasional "corrective setbacks" taking place, and with profit-taking a moderately disturbing influence. Nothing noteworthy has occurred in the bond market.

Reason for downward trend of the indicators, says Business Week "can be found in the abnormally high level recorded toward the close of 1936 and the beginning of 1937, rather than the current level." In other words, in the immediate past, activity was artificially feverish, due largely to prospective labor troubles and prospective price rises. Inventories were built up rapidly—in some cases, to excessive proportions. Buyers thronged a sellers' market. Now the situation is a little different.

The problem of labor difficulties remains—though hopes are held that the National Labor Relations Act will prove a soothing factor to both labor and capital. But the price outlook now is mixed. No longer does it appear certain that continuous rises will take place this year. Copper prices recently dropped more than two cents. A large steel corporation announced that there would be no increases in the third quarter. Scrap prices are down, and are weakening. This is generally true throughout the durable goods market.

In the consumer goods market, there are also signs of recession in prices. The average commodity price level has oozed downward fractionally for a number of successive weeks. And the President is known to be turning his attention to the price structure, and tending to the view, held by most economists, that the late upward trend was a dangerous one, filled with inflationary possibilities.

Inescapably connected with the course of prices and the progress of industry is government fiscal policy. The recent budget message was not encouraging in that it showed wide, unfavorable discrepancies between actual and contemplated income. It did stress the need for economy—a need which is making itself felt in Congress, some leaders having come out strongly for cuts all along the line in appropriations. Business awaits the outcome.

A less tangible, but encouraging factor is the outlook in the legislative field. It seems doubtful if Congress will endorse, this session, any major law inimical to industry. A number of such laws have been proposed, such as the thirty-hour week bill, and the corporation licensing bill. But those close to the Washington scene give such laws almost no chance of passing, the radical Congressional bloc being definitely in the minority.

In the meantime, employment is rising, and so are payrolls. Corporation earnings statements covering the first quarter of this year are mostly better than in the same period of 1936. Home building made advances, though the long anticipated boom in this field is still over the horizon. A few industries, notably electrical manufacturers, have made extraordinary sales records, passing all previous levels by wide margins.

So it looks as if we will be in for a quiet summer, with "paramount issues" at a minimum, save for those already in the headlines. The next six weeks or so in Congress will be concentrated on floor debate of the proposal to increase the membership of the Supreme Court, and there is a good chance that Congress will not adjourn until September.

The other day an army plane winged southward from Washington, bearing a document that finally reached the President at sea, was quickly signed by him. This was the new neutrality act, hurried through House and Senate by Congressmen with an anxious eye on the turbulent European War situation. The act is a compromise between the advocates of mandatory neutrality and discretionary neutrality—that is, a law which forces the President to forbid trade with belligerent nations, and one which permits him to use his judgment in the light of circumstances.

The new act is not perfect—but it is regarded as being about as good as could be had, and great hopes for keeping America out of war are bound up in it. It places an embargo on arms shipments to fighting nations. And, in the event of war, it gives the President discretionary power to list goods that cannot be exported to belligerents; to deny belligerents use of our ports, etc. Import provision extends this authority to civil as well as inter-nation wars.

"War in Europe this summer, perhaps; this fall, sure," is being talked by some. But there has been much talk of that kind for several years, and no general war has broken out yet. It looks as if the powers are uncertain of the relative strengths, are doing a considerable amount of bluster bluffing.

The Candy Girl

By JANE OSBORN

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

WHEN Martha was in college she made up her mind that if she ever did have to earn her own living she would do it in some unusual way. She would go into some sort of business that didn't attract other college graduates. Thus she, with her superior education, would compete only with obviously inferior, uneducated people and her financial success would be assured. Martha was the one member of her family who had gone to college—that was doubtless why she held such an exalted idea of the value of the degree for which she was working. Until the end of her senior year there didn't seem to be the shadow of a chance that she ever would have to earn her own living. She had inherited from her father large tracts of farm land—but somehow through an involvement of business that Martha couldn't quite understand any immediate return from her acres was out of the question.

Martha took stock of her accomplishments. All around the campus she was known as the candy girl. That settled it. If there was one thing she excelled in it was in making candy. Undoubtedly she had a gift—and this gift she would put to good account. She had never heard of a man or woman with a college degree going into the candy business. But, she decided, the vast majority of her competitors in this business would not be blessed with superior education such as hers.

On the last day of college Bertram Ross had proposed to Martha. A few days before another of her class had proposed. Two or three others would have done the same if she had given them an opportunity. But Martha was not especially impressed by this epidemic of proposals. She felt that her popularity was due to no personal charms, but rather to her ability to make candy. So she told Bertram Ross that she didn't want to marry him because she wanted to go into the candy business.

All that summer Martha worked at her scheme. She made a little candy in a little room she had hired in the city and she sold it at the exchanges and at the counters of one or two grocery stores, making enough barely to cover expenses. She couldn't meet much more of a demand until she set up a larger workroom and hired a girl or two to help with the work, and she couldn't afford to expand her plant in this way unless she was assured of orders. So Martha went forth with samples and took orders. She went to the buying agent for a large chain of newsstands. He cautiously expressed approval of the candy, but if he took any he would take a great deal. He would want a contract and a guarantee that she would continue to use the same ingredients that she did then. Of course Martha used the best materials.

Martha looked over the terms of the proposed contract. The price seemed a little too low, but the buying agent said he would not consider a deal at a higher figure and Martha knew he meant it. He wanted to have her sign at once but

Mussolini Is Hailed by Moslems in Libya

Stalking between ranks of white-clad Moslems, Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy (left) is shown with Gen. Italo Balbo, governor of Libya, as he made an inspection during his recent tour of the Italian colony in Africa. Italo Duce pledged his word that Moslems in Italy's possessions would be protected and given full liberty to practice their own religion.

Martha held back—she would have to do a little figuring first.

Martha went elatedly back to her dining workroom and read the proposed contract over carefully. She had stopped to get wholesale prices on her way home. Some things in the contract she did not quite understand. Then it occurred to her that Bertram Ross was working in a law office, studying law at the same time. He could easily explain the few things she didn't understand in the contract. Martha knew Bertram was in the same city but he had said that since she would not marry him he didn't want to see her. He had seemed so incredulous about her plans that she wanted him to see this contract anyway—wanted to show him that within a few months she had won success.

So it was that the next day Bertram Ross called at Martha's candy kitchen to talk over the contract. Martha gave a little gasp as he appeared. She had forgotten how very attractive he really was.

With the contract spread out on one of the work tables and Martha bending over it in her pink work smock they read it slowly together. Bertram asked a few questions and did some quick figuring. Then he looked at Martha.

"It can't be done," he said. "They tried to sew you up with a losing deal. Either you have got to use less expensive materials or you've got to get more for your candy, and if you sign this contract and don't make good you'll be in a pretty fix."

Martha began very gently to cry. The whole fabric of her dreams seemed to fade away, and all she knew or cared about just then was that Bertram was beside her, that he had his arms around her, and that he was telling her that even while he was studying law he could afford to support her as his wife.

"You know that early marriages even on a limited income turn out best—you learned that in college," Bertram told her.

"I know I did," agreed Martha happily.

Growths at High Altitude

Though buffeted by fierce winds and storms, trees persist in Rocky Mountain National park up to an altitude of approximately 11,000 feet. The dwarfed and twisted trunks of those to be found at "timber-line" bear mute witness to the severity of their determined struggle for existence, while occasionally a big spruce will be found lying flat on the ground like a vine. Yet this is not the limit of growing things, so far as this mountainous country is concerned, for many of the 600 species of wildflowers native to the region may be found above timber-line; while numerous shrubs and willows of true arctic species thrive above the line of the last of the trees.

The Philosophic Hand

The Philosophic hand is bony and long with finger joints which protrude like the knots in a piece of wood. The fingers also take on this bony, knotted appearance and they are always as long as, if not longer than, the palm itself, according to a writer in Pearson's London Weekly. This is the hand of the student and the reasoner, who likes to work out his own theories and who is not content to be guided by others unless he has proved their statements to his own satisfaction. Having an exclusive, ascetic outlook on life, one insists on developing his mentality to the utmost and displays great carefulness in all he does.

Crown Colony of Leeward Islands

The crown colony of Leeward Islands, of which Antigua forms a part, is a group of islands in the Caribbean sea. For administrative purpose the colony is divided into five presidencies, Antigua, Dominica, Montserrat, St. Christopher, and the Virgin Islands. The presidency of Antigua includes the islands of Antigua, Barbuda, and Redonda. The first settlements date back to 1632, and the island has been in English hands almost continuously since that time.

The Allegheny River

The Allegheny river rises in the high, hilly plateau region of Potter county, Pa., and flows in a general north-westerly direction and crosses into New York, to a point eleven miles north of the state line. Here it turns abruptly southwest, recrosses the state line into Pennsylvania and continues in that state to its confluence with the Monongahela at Pittsburgh.

"IT WASN'T my fault," stormed Mary Thorpe. "It wasn't! And I won't take the blame! That stupid old Bob Henderson wouldn't get over on his own side of the road and he ran right into me—on purpose!"

She uttered the last two words emphatically, almost impulsively, as if in one last desperate attempt to clear herself. Her black eyes were furious.

"Don't be absurd, Mary," Phil Breckenridge reprimanded. "No man, especially one who has been driving as long as Bob Henderson is going to run into any one on purpose—not even a woman," he added with a trace of bitterness in his tones.

"Well, I'm satisfied that it was no fault of mine," Mary told him. There was a hint of the defensive in her attitude. It was this that aroused Phil's suspicions, prompted this interrogation. It wasn't like Mary to provoke the least doubt, even by her attitude, that she could be wrong whenever she and Phil engaged themselves in an argument.

Besides, there was an issue at stake. Mary was desperate, a desperation conjured by Phil's threat of a month ago. If he had told her, she became involved in one more accident, regardless of blame, it would mean the end of her driving career. She had taken him seriously; her ability to convince him of her innocence in the Bob Henderson affair was important.

"But good lord, Mary," Phil went on, "your car was found way over on the left-hand side of the road. You must have been partly to blame."

"If my car was found where you say it was," Mary returned, "Bob Henderson knocked it there. I assure you, dear husband, I know my right hand from my left."

"Of course, dear, but if you were in any way to blame for the accident I want you to admit it. It's a nasty mess, and if Bob can collect from the insurance company, it's only fair that we shouldn't stand in his way. Let's go over the whole thing again. Just where did the accident occur?"

Mary sighed resignedly. "I've told you a hundred times, Phil. It was near the lake, between Hilldale and Ridgefield."

"There's an open stretch there," Phil said thoughtfully. "Really no excuse for an accident. It was close to sunset, wasn't it?"

"Yes, I remember distinctly. The sky was lovely. I—" She broke off abruptly and Phil was quick to see the sudden change in her expression.

"You were watching the sunset!" he cried. "I remember now. You've been driving out there two or three times a week to look at it. You weren't watching the road."

"I was! I was watching the road! But quite naturally I couldn't help but look at the sunset. It was there, staring me in the face!"

"Of course!" Phil was bitterly sarcastic now. "But you couldn't very well look at both at the same time. While you were staring into space with that enraptured look on your face, Bob Henderson's car appeared. He swerved far to his right to avoid a collision and—"

"It isn't so," Mary interrupted furiously. "Bob could have avoided that accident if he'd been paying attention to his driving. He admits himself he was in a hurry to get to Ridgefield."

"Ridgefield!" Phil blurted. "But good heavens, Mary, if Bob was heading toward Ridgefield you must have been coming the other way. Away from the sunset!"

Mary nodded silently, curiously aware of a strange premonition of disaster. She dreaded her husband's next question.

Cold suspicion was written in Phil's eyes. "You lied," he said coldly. "You couldn't have been staring at the sunset if you were heading toward Ridgefield. Come now, might as well make a clean breast of it."

Mary suddenly broke down and cried. Phil usually weakened at sight of tears. But this time he was immobile. He waited for the storm to pass, allowed Mary to drape her arms about his neck

Russia Is Streamlining Its Locomotives

stared down into her tear-stained face with an expression impassively cold.

"Well?" he asked.

Mary whimpered. "Oh, Phil, don't you see? It was my fault—the sunset was beautiful. I couldn't help but watch it. You know I spent hours in the mountains last summer, just watching the sunsets. I'm sorry, I'll explain everything to Mr. Henderson, and try to fix it so he'll get his insurance."

Phil's brow wrinkled. Secretly he had hoped Mary would offer an excuse that would clear her of guilt. It was convenient—the fact that she could drive; and he hated to play the part of the brutal husband in refusing to let her. Even now he clung to the hope that her alibi would justify her actions of the afternoon.

"But I don't understand, darling. How in the world could you be looking at the sunset if it was behind you?"

"But, Phil, I've explained that. I was watching it in the rear view mirror."

Animals' Horns

All horned animals either have bony cores inside the horns, like cows and goats, or have solid horns, like deer and moose. The solid-horned animals shed their horns once a year, the core-horned ones never shed them. The pronghorn, alone of all horned creatures, has horns that grow over bony cores—and yet sheds them every year.

CARLISLE HENDERSON read the advertisement again. It seemed worth while investigating, even though he had followed up many promising trails only to find that they ended in disappointment. Still, this was what he wanted—if only it was like what it said it was: 48th St. 44 West—Completely furnished apartment; 3 rooms, bath, kitchen, elevator, telephone. All conveniences; $100. Sublet till October.

From the outside the place looked bright and clean. Big windows, he noted approvingly; the apartments on the lower floors, which were occupied, showed glimpses of tastefully furnished rooms—not the green-plush and golden-oak horrors among which he had lived for so many weeks. He mounted the steps and rang the bell.

A trim maid answered the ring. "Produced the clipping," she said. "Two flights up," she said. "Just knock, apartment 24."

He climbed the stairs. They were wide, deep-carpeted, quiet. The whole house breathed an air of refinement. And there was a three-room apartment here for rent at 100 dollars a month. His mind instinctively took up suspicions. There must be something wrong with the place, at that price. Another flight of stairs and he was standing before apartment 24.

There was no card in the little holder, but a gleaming brass knocker invited use. He rapped tentatively. Footsteps sounded on the other side of the door, and in a moment the handle turned and he was bade a cheerful "Come in!"

The light of the room after the dimness of the hallway dazzled his eyes for a moment, and he could not make out the features of the girl who confronted him. He noted that she was small and slim, and dressed in a businesslike suit of dark material; then his eyes roved about the beautiful little apartment with its wicker furniture, its comfortable looking couch, the shaded electric lights. It was what he wanted, all right. His eyes returned to the girl, and he saw her back against the wall, her one hand clenched at her throat. He saw that her face was white—and then he saw that he knew her.

"Alice!" It was a mere whisper. The shock of surprise nearly stunned him. "Alice—you—how did you get here?"

"Carlisle, I—" The words came with difficulty. "I came last year. I've been painting—not very well, I'm afraid—with a little nervous laugh. At least, no one wants to buy my pictures. I had a little money, but it's nearly all gone, so I had to sublet this place. Did you see my advertisement in the paper?"

"Yes, I saw it—but—Alice—I—do you remember when I last saw you?"

She looked away. "Yes, I—I remember," she said at last.

"Well, I want to say—why didn't you answer my letters?"

"I—I don't know. I was hurt, Carlisle, hurt and proud. Oh, I was wicked not to write! I know it now. And then you stopped writing, and I couldn't stand it any longer. And I came here to work—and to forget. And now you come here!"

"Alice—Alice, dear, I want to ask your pardon for the things I said and did that night."

With a little cry she flung herself into his arms.

"Oh, Carlisle, Carlisle, it's I who should ask pardon. I was wrong—hopelessly, bitterly wrong—and I see it now. I saw it months ago, but I couldn't bring myself to write. And then you changed your address, and I couldn't find you again. And I was so miserable. Carlisle, dear, won't you kiss me and say that it's all right?"

"Alice, it never was anything but all right. I've found you now and I don't intend to let you go. Let's let bygones be bygones, and not think any more of that bad old time. You're mine now, and you'll never get away again."

There was silence for a moment. Then she raised her head from his arms.

"You're not going to leave me?" "Never! You must keep this apartment. By the way, how did you come to advertise it at such a crazy price? It's worth twice that, furnished as it is."

She blushed. "I'll confess. I didn't know where you were and I couldn't find your address, but I met a girl the other day who said she knew you were hunting for a place to live, so I advertised at such a price that I was sure you'd come to investigate. I've had that ad in all the papers for a week and I've had the most fearful time telling everybody who came that the place was taken. But I was sure you'd come."

A rap at the door interrupted them. Alice opened and admitted a large man who puffed from his stair-climbing exertions.

"I see you've got a place to sublet," he began, "can I look at it?"

Before Alice could answer Carlisle stepped forward.

"I'm sorry, sir," he said. "The place is taken."

"Pathetic Fallacy"
The phrase, "pathetic fallacy" was invented by Ruskin to designate the illusion that external objects seem actuated by human feelings, particularly when one is under great emotional strain.

Snails Pump Water

A species of snail, found in limestone waters around Americus, Ga., can rise to the top of a pond or sink to the bottom by pumping water into or out of an air chamber. This is the same principle used by underwater boats.

Quakers Once Banned

The general court (assembly) of Massachusetts Bay colony, whose people crossed the Atlantic to enjoy freedom of worship, barred Quakers upon pain of lashes and deportation. A fine of $500 decreed for the master of any ship transporting Quakers into the jurisdiction of the colony, and all brought in were to be jailed, given 20 stripes, and set to work until deported. Plymouth colony, Connecticut, the Dutch in Manhattan and Virginia followed with similar laws. Virginia decreed a fine of 5,000 pounds of tobacco upon the master of a vessel carrying a Quaker to Jamestown.
